

IMPORTANT TO KNOW

Before renting a room in shared accommodations, think about the following:

Life in a shared residential unit requires tolerance and consideration. The life style, behavior and cooking customs of the residents of shared accommodations can be very different. That presents a challenge for living together well but also the chance to learn about new people and cultures.

Self-organization. Your own room as well as the kitchen, bathroom and the common spaces must be cleaned by the residents themselves. All participate in the joint household work and garbage disposal.

Those in the shared accommodation organize themselves to do this.

Independence. In this housing development, the independence of the renter is called upon. Problems regarding cleanliness and living together are to be solved by the residents of the shared accommodation independently among themselves. The management is responsible for the maintenance of the property.
